

Operational and Capital Alliance Agreement with NTT DoCoMo and Private Placement of New Shares

November 30, 2005

Aplix Corporation

1. Operational and capital alliance

Aplix Corporation (“Aplix” or “The company”) and NTT DoCoMo, Inc. (“DoCoMo”) are already involved in a mutually beneficial relationship, primarily in joint development of the DoJa™ / Java™ platform and other software. This cooperation has already resulted in the inclusion of the jointly developed DoJa platform and Aplix’s JBlend™ Java platform in all six new model 902i series FOMA™ mobile phones that DoCoMo launched in Autumn 2005. Our cooperative relationship has been growing steadily stronger.

At this juncture, looking ahead to the broader use of third-generation (3G) mobile communications as well as HSDPA and other so-called 3.5G mobile communications services, our two companies have decided to enter into a contractual agreement of operational and capital alliance, to advance our relationship further, aiming to develop more sophisticated software for mobile telephone handsets, and supply this software in a stable manner over the medium- to long-term.

Our joint development of software, and the inclusion of this software in mobile communications handsets, improves convenience for the consumer, and in so doing enhances the enterprise value of both corporations.

Aiming to ensure continued, stable software development as described above, DoCoMo and Aplix have reached an agreement on operational and capital alliance, as follows: (i) capital increase through third-party share allocation with detail described below, (ii) software development, primarily Java technologies including the DoJa / Java platform, (iii) nomination of a candidate for Aplix’s board of directors from DoCoMo, and so on.

2. New share issuance through third-party share allocation
