

GEMINI MOBILE AND APLIX JOIN FORCES TO BRING GEMINI'S EXPLO™ TO WIRELESS MARKETPLACE

TOKYO, JAPAN AND SAN MATEO, CA , Nov., 6, 2006 – Gemini Mobile Technologies, a developer of wireless software, today announced it has entered into a collaboration with Aplix Corporation (Tokyo Stock Exchange: 3727), the global leader in deploying Java™ technology in mobile phones, to integrate and distribute its new eXplo™ platform. eXplo™ is a revolutionary software platform designed to enable users to chat, share photos, play and shop in 3D worlds on their wireless phones.

The eXplo platform has been integrated into Aplix's JBlend™ Java platform that is embedded on the popular Sharp handsets powering Softbank Mobile's recently announced S!Town service. Gemini plans to evolve eXplo as one of Aplix's handset turnkey offerings in the near future.

"Aplix is the leader in deploying Java technology with our JBlend platform shipped on over 233 million handsets and consumer devices as of June this year," said Ryu Koriyama, chief executive officer of Aplix. "By teaming up with Gemini to bring eXplo to the market, we will offer our customers additional next-generation Java features and further our leadership position in the industry."

"Our collaboration with Aplix combines their strong Java base with our knowledge in wireless infrastructure development," said Scott Driggers, chief executive officer and co-founder of Gemini Mobile Technologies. "Today's announcement broadens our distribution enabling eXplo to reach millions of mobile phones and consumer devices and gives Aplix a powerful and cutting-edge offering for their customer base."
